Anglers All and Patagonia Raise More than $11K for Conservation

Colorado Trout Unlimited Key Beneficiary from Annual Trout Clave Event

LITTLETON, CO – Anglers All is thrilled to announce that it raised more than $11,000 for conservation at its annual Trout Clave, held on April 21, 2018. These proceeds will go to Colorado Trout Unlimited to carry out important river conservation and habitat work.

Anglers All and Colorado Trout Unlimited (CTU) co-hosted this year's Trout Clave, an annual spring event at the Littleton fly fishing shop. When Anglers All committed to donate a portion of the sales from the event to CTU, Patagonia generously agreed to match that donation.

"The 2018 Clave was a huge success," said Anglers All owner, Chris Keeley. "I'm personally proud of the commitment to conservation that our staff, clients, and friends displayed this year. We can make a difference together."

In addition to Patagonia, key sponsors for the event included Fishpond, Sage, and Breckenridge Brewery. In addition to raising funds for CTU, the event promoted successful membership drives for the Bonefish and Tarpon Trust and Backcountry Hunters and Anglers.

"Colorado Trout Unlimited so appreciated the opportunity to participate in the 2018 Trout Clave," commented CTU development director, Shannon Kindle. "We had a fantastic day sharing our conservation story with attendees and recruiting a great group of new members! As the beneficiary of Anglers All's generosity and the matching funds donated by Patagonia, we look forward to putting those dollars to work on the ground in Colorado through habitat restoration, native trout reintroduction, and much more."

About Anglers All: Anglers All was founded in 1954 as a small tackle shop in the basement of the Littleton Motel. A few things have changed since then. But no matter the year, the water conditions, or the species of fish, Anglers All has provided the Denver area and the Colorado Front Range with the best fly fishing information and equipment for 64 years and counting.
